Chapter 1 by Erika

Jasia ran her pencil over the back of her calculator, creating outlines of the words embossed on it. The words didn't mean anything to her, of course, but she had nothing else to do. Her math teacher was incredibly strict during tests, and wouldn't allow students to do anything but sit quietly at their desks until everyone had finished or the bell rang to leave class, whichever came first. Usually, she would sit and doodle on her hands in pen, but today anxiety was itching at her and she was afraid she would dig her pen into her flesh too hard.

Today, Jasia had become something she had never thought she would be.

A cheater.
